Bloomberg Businessweek
Contents

October 11 — October 17, 2010
Bloomberg Businessweek

Feel-good food
In bad times, folks reach for the condiments p96

Opening Remarks 6

Nine years have passed since the U.S. went to war in Afghanistan, and the conflict is not going according to plan. A graphical look at the cost—in lives and in dollars—of the war

Global Economics 10

Israel's ruling families
The same surnames pop up everywhere in Israel's economy. That power worries the government

India: The Commonwealth Games expose Singh's flaws p12
China's hunt for natural gas goes unconventional p14
A rising franc brings sticker shock to Switzerland p15
Tom Keene's EconoChat p15
Seven days ahead p16

Companies & Industries 19

Stuck at the gate
American avoided bankruptcy—and now it's paying the price, with labor woes and high costs

A bitter choice for India: Water for steel or for food? p20
Burger King needs an expensive face-lift p21
Wal-Mart woos partners to boost its purchasing power p23
Toyota's big trucks tank p24
Briefs p25

Politics & Policy 26

Green campaigner
Terry McAuliffe's push for a clean energy empire in Virginia could be a strategy for his political comeback

A threat to high-speed rail p28
Obama wants to hit the reset button with business p29
This year it is better to give p32
Financial regulators search for risky businesses p33

Technology 35

Bad boy Ellison is back
The Oracle CEO is ridiculing rivals once again, a sign that competition is heating up

Network gripes for China's iPhone users p36
Silicon Valley takeover bait p37
Taiwan: A $1,000 iPad case? p38
Charlie Rose: Dick Costolo p39
Electronic eyeglasses p40

Markets & Finance 43

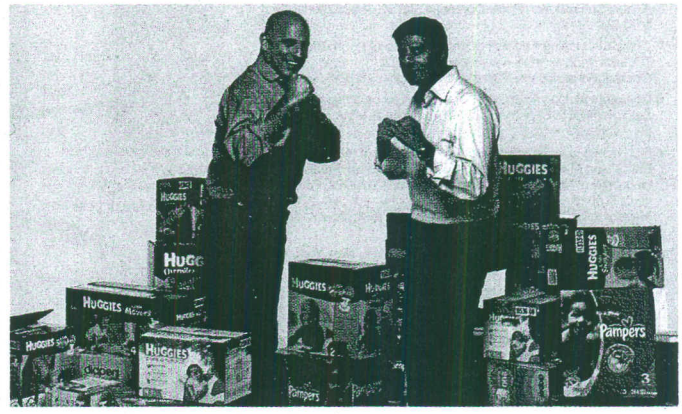
The foreclosure fiasco
Faulty paperwork may end up haunting lenders, insurers, and home buyers for years to come

A legal challenge to Ireland's banking-crisis cleanup p44
Prudential vs. AIA in Asia p45
Wall Street's pay gap p46
Profit forecasts head lower p48
Meredith Whitney, mortal p49
Bid & Ask: The week's deals p50

Alternative Energy 53

Startups' 'Valley of Death'
New cleantech companies face longer survival odds amid tight money and policy gridlock

Bringing a little Jack Welch to Abound Solar p54
Brazil's plan to ride on its steady breezes p56
Where will the wind blow? p58
Q&A: Shell's Marvin Odum p59
The perils of protectionism p60



Not child's play Lore and Bharara aren't afraid of Amazon

Features 62

Diaper vs. Goliath
Why does Diapers.com—which will sell 500 million nappies this year—worry Amazon? Its narrow focus creates efficiencies the Web giant can't match p62

Want to Buy a Greek Island? Enter the Labyrinth
The government is considering selling sun-soaked properties to pay down debt. The country's bureaucratic maze may make that impossible p70

Communication Breakdown
The BlackBerry still dominates in the corporate world, but the iPhone gets all the love. Amid all the noise, RIM's co-CEOs struggle to be heard p76

Etc. 89

Why Ballers Go Bust
An alarming number of star athletes end up broke. Now leagues are trying to do something about it

The Decline and Fall of Business Casual Decorum is making a comeback p94
Food Banana ketchup and other new condiments are cutting the mustard p96
Wealth Nicholas Kaiser manages three mutual funds that adhere to Sharia law p98
Hands On Apple TV is now built around its ability to use your home Wi-Fi network to stream high-def movies and shows, photos, and music to your television p100
The Stack Jane Smiley confers the grace of a fine novelist on the story of John Atanasoff, the man who designed the world's first computer p101
Hard Choices Acumen Fund's Jacqueline Novogratz on choosing a career investing in Africa's future over a plum offer from the COO of Chase Manhattan Bank p104

COVER: LETTERING BY TAL LEMING/TYPE SUPPLY; BABY: GETTY IMAGES; THIS PAGE: DANIELLE LEVITT