

Bloomberg Businessweek

Contents

November 15 — November 21, 2010
Bloomberg Businessweek

Squeaking indicator
Why Occidental Petroleum may be a good bet p94

Opening Remarks

10

The American financial system should be a quiet and efficient servant. Instead, it is erratic, voracious, and addicted to speed. Here's how to rein in the beast

Global Economics

15

Money fears in Asia

As G-20 leaders converge on Seoul, Asia's central bankers are struggling to contain the flood of dollars

- London's tower trouble p16
- The German euro takes on the Irish contagion p17
- A TV ad boom in China p18
- Betting on $100-a-barrel oil p20
- Israel: Netanyahu on growth p20
- Seven days ahead p22

Companies & Industries

25

Seasonal disorder

Luxury retailers are upbeat about holiday sales while mass-market chains are cutting prices

- The power of pop-up stores p26
- Holiday windows go digital p27
- A U.K. feast before the fast p28
- In luxury, reliable tops trendy p28
- Retailers' big bets p30
- China: No joy for toymakers p32
- Briefs p34

Loving Li The Robin Li fan club waits for a glimpse of the Baidu CEO

Features

60

How Baidu Won China

Robin Li banged heads to beat Google and make his search engine China's No. 1. His next target: the world. First, he'll have to win Web users' trust p60

The Pistachio King and the POM Queen

Stewart and Lynda Resnick are generous philanthropists who made billions on pistachios and pomegranates. So why is everyone suing them? p68

The Best Business Schools 2010

With some hard lessons learned, B-schools have put a new emphasis on job placement as they work through the post-crash hangover p77

Etc.

89

The Billionaire in the Kitchen

Want to make yucca look like coal? Then a 2,400-page cookbook by Microsoft's former tech chief is for you

- The Office Lab What your choice of work shirt says about you p92
- Wealth FPA Crescent Fund's Steven Romick finds opportunity in volatility p94
- Art Pablo Picasso's late works, once disparaged, have become sensations as newly wealthy Chinese collectors flock to the large—and loud—paintings p96
- One True Thing A stylish bag that converts from workday to out-at-night p99
- The Stack In a book that owes as much to Jack Welch's Straight from the Gut as to Harry Truman's memoirs, George W. Bush sees decisiveness as its own reward p100
- Hard Choices San Francisco Giants manager Bruce Bochy on tweaking his lineup, benching veterans, and leading his team to a World Series victory p102

Will they shop?
A look at the holiday retail season. p25

Politics & Policy

37

Valedictorian's dilemma

High-achieving undocumented students look to the Harry Reid-backed Dream Act for help

- Michele Bachmann demands a little respect p39
- Geithner's yoga lesson p40
- Pelosi gets downsized p40
- TARP cop vs. White House p42
- The lame-duck agenda p42

Technology

45

Is that phone insured?

Asurion quietly covers millions of cell phones. Consumer advocates say the policies are a bad deal

- TaskRabbit lets people bid to do your errands p46
- The orange robots that help e-commerce stars compete p47
- Ask.com gives up on search p48
- The 24-year-old taking on GM's OnStar service p49

Markets & Finance

51

Modified mortgage mess

Programs meant to avert foreclosures aren't helping. In some cases, they're causing evictions

- Lloyds' new CEO p52
- How swaps soak taxpayers p53
- Sizing up GM before its IPO p54
- Why Janus Overseas Fund is betting on the U.S. p55
- Bid & Ask: The week's deals p56
- Charlie Rose/Mary Schapiro p58